From the back cover: "Ghanaian forestry in the process of rediscovering its past, consolidating what it does best, and learning from innovative new forest management initiatives. "Falling into Place" charts the evolution of policies that affect forests. It describes how the timber-first orientation of forestry is giving way to more collaborative policy and forest management from a greater range of forest values, and how tactical approaches led by key opinion-formers and policy-makers have been successful at overcoming resistance to change."
